Neoconservatism and the New American Century
Neoconservatism and the New American Century

by

Maria Ryan
To the memory of Mary Murray

and

To my parents
Contents

Acknowledgments ix

Introduction The Pre-9/11 Years 1

1 From Berlin to Baghdad: The Second Generation and the New World Order 11

2 The Neoconservatives and Clintonism, 1993–1995 27

3 The Neoconservative-Led Network 51

4 “Time for an Insurrection”: From the Dole Campaign to the Project for the New American Century 71

5 Iraq 91

6 Filling in the “Unknowns”: National Missile Defense and the Rumsfeld Commission 111

7 Kosovo 129

8 China: The Limits of “Unipolarity” 145

9 Election 2000 159

Conclusion The Unipolarists in Power 179

Notes 191

Select Bibliography 247

Index 265
Acknowledgments

Needless to say, I have incurred many debts over the years while researching and writing this book. It is my pleasure to acknowledge them here.

Firstly, my thanks go to Professor Scott Lucas for supervising this work in its original form as a doctoral thesis and going above and beyond the call of duty in the intellectual and personal support he gave to me during that time. In a very practical way, Scott helped me onto the first rung of the academic ladder by hiring me as his research assistant back when I was an aspiring but impecunious PhD student struggling to pay tuition fees. Without his boundless enthusiasm and encouragement, I probably would not be here.

This work has benefited greatly from feedback that I have received from a number of esteemed colleagues. I am extremely grateful to Richard Crockett and Richard Lock-Pullan for the outstanding job they did examining this work as doctoral thesis in 2007 and giving me plenty of food for thought when it came to revising it for publication. Professors Matthew Jones and Richard King read through key parts of the book and gave trenchant and much appreciated feedback. Thank you also to my friend and colleague Bevan Sewell who put himself on call to read parts of the manuscript at very short notice near the end. I am also very grateful to two anonymous reviewers from Intelligence and National Security, who gave much needed constructive criticism of the sections on the Rumsfeld Commission, which are much improved as a result. It goes without saying that any remaining flaws are mine. My sincerest thanks, too, to the Arts and Humanities Research Council, which supported the research for this project full time for two and a half years while I was a doctoral student.

I also owe a debt of gratitude to my new academic home at the University of Nottingham. My thanks go (again) to Richard King, Matthew Jones, and Peter Ling for having faith in a rookie and hiring me before I had even finished my PhD. I know how lucky I am. I am also grateful to my erstwhile Heads of School, Judie Newman and Pete Messent, for being on hand to provide excellent advice about all aspects of publishing a book.
I am very happy to have had the opportunity to work with my editor, Chris Chappell and his assistant, Sam Hasey, at Palgrave Macmillan in New York. I also thank Matt Robison and Serena Peck for their excellent work on production and copy editing.

On a personal level, my greatest debt is, of course, to my parents for the support they have given me all these years. Special thanks also to my sister, Helen, for her commitment to the cause, especially when I was a student. And I would be remiss if I did not say thanks to my friends, old and new, who know who they are.