Gender and Interpersonal Violence
Also by Karen Throsby

WHEN IVF FAILS
Feminism, Infertility and the Negotiation of Normality

Also by Flora Alexander

CONTEMPORARY WOMEN NOVELISTS
Gender and Interpersonal Violence

Language, Action and Representation

Edited by

Karen Throsby
University of Warwick, UK

Flora Alexander
Formerly at University of Aberdeen, UK
Contents

Acknowledgements
vii
Notes on Contributors
viii

Introduction
Karen Throsby and Flora Alexander

Part I  Lived Experience

1. 'Turning a Pretty Girl into a Killer': Women, Violence and Clandestine Operations during the Second World War
   Juliette Pattinson
   11

2. ‘I Still Sort of Flounder Around in a Sea of Non-Language': The Constraints of Language and Labels in Women’s Accounts of Woman-to-Woman Partner Abuse
   Rebecca Barnes
   29

3. Cultural Transformations and Gender Violence: South Asian Women’s Experiences of Sexual Violence and Familial Dynamics
   Bipasha Ahmed, Paula Reavey and Anamika Majumdar
   44

4. Sexual Trafficking: A New Sexual Story?
   Alison Jobe
   66

5. ‘That’s a Bit Drastic’: Risk and Blame in Accounts of Obesity Surgery
   Karen Throsby
   83

6. The Promise of Understanding: Sex, Violence, Trauma and the Body
   Jane Kilby
   100

Part II  Representations

7. ‘It's Wrong for a Boy to Hit a Girl Because the Girl Might Cry': Investigating Primary School Children’s Attitudes Towards Violence Against Women
   Nancy Lombard
   121
8 Images of Abusers: Stranger-Danger, the Media, and the Social Currency of Everyday Knowledge
Jenny Kitzinger 139

9 Female-On-Male Violence: Medical Responses and Popular Imagination
Jarmila Mildorf 157

10 Male-On-Male Violence Against Women: Gender Representation and Violence in Rebecca Prichard's Fair Game
Richard A. Bryan 171

11 'He Could See Her No Longer': The Negation of Femininity Through Violence in Ian McEwan's Fiction
Fiona Tolan 186

12 Thelma and Louise and the Politics of Excess
Alex Tate 200

13 Slap and Tickle: Violence as Fun in the Movies
Jenny O'Connor 214

Conclusion
Flora Alexander and Karen Throsby 229

Index 233
Acknowledgements

Both Karen and Flora would like to thank Jeannette King at the University of Aberdeen, who organised the Feminist and Women’s Studies Association (FWSA) conference in 2005 and who encouraged us to take this publication forward. Our thanks also go to Joyce Walker, and the rest of the organising committee, who all worked incredibly hard to make the conference a success. We are also grateful to the Principal of the University of Aberdeen who provided a grant to support the event. We would like to thank all the participants for making the event such a success and the members and executive committee of the FWSA for their ongoing commitment to the goals of the organisation.

We would like to thank Jill Lake at Palgrave Macmillan for helping us to take this project forward in the early stages and Olivia Middleton and Philippa Grand for their editorial support, and especially their patience. Thanks also go to the two anonymous reviewers for their supportive and constructive comments. We are grateful to all the contributors of the book for their hard work.

The editors and publishers wish to thank the following for permission to reproduce copyright material:

Imperial War Museum, for photograph (MH24434) of Jacqueline Nearne in the 1944 documentary School for Danger.
Notes on Contributors

Bipasha Ahmed is a senior lecturer in social psychology and qualitative methodologies in the School of Psychology, University of East London. Her research interests are in critical approaches to psychology, particularly relating to ‘race’, gender and class. She has published and presented research on the social construction of racism, feminist psychology and issues relating to the research process. She is currently involved in researching South Asian women’s experiences of sexual violence.

Flora Alexander is the author of Contemporary Women Novelists (Edward Arnold, 1989) and articles on fiction by English, Scottish and Canadian women. Until 2001 she was a senior lecturer at the University of Aberdeen, where she co-founded an undergraduate programme in Women’s Studies and taught on several Women’s Studies courses, including a module on Gender and Violence.

Rebecca Barnes is a lecturer in Sociology at the University of Derby. She recently completed her PhD at the University of Nottingham, where she researched violence and abuse in women’s same-sex relationships. She has wider research interests in gendered conceptualisations of domestic and sexual violence, and the long-term impacts of domestic violence upon the self.

Richard A. Bryan has, since the start of this project, advanced from doctoral candidate to lecturer at the University of Tennessee. Now, although he has enjoyed and been greatly rewarded for his time in Knoxville, he looks forward to the fall and to serving as an assistant professor of dramatic literature in the Department of Language, Literature and Philosophy at Armstrong Atlantic State University in Savannah, Georgia.

Alison Jobe recently completed a PhD on trafficked women’s access to asylum in the United Kingdom, at Newcastle University. Her research interests include sexual trafficking, the prevention of violence against women, female asylum seekers and the UK asylum system.

Jane Kilby is a lecturer in the School of English, Sociology, Politics and Contemporary History at the University of Salford. Her research focuses on sexual violence and victim testimony. She is the author of Violence and the Cultural Politics of Trauma (EUP, 2007) and is currently writing a book on the ordinary nature of incest.

Jenny Kitzinger is a professor of Media and Communications Research at the University of Cardiff. Her work examines power struggles in media production processes and is particularly concerned with questions of media influence and audience reception. She is the co-author of Human Cloning in the Media: From Science Fiction to Science Practice (Routledge, 2007) and the author of Framing Abuse: Media Influence and Public Understandings of Violence Against Children (Pluto, 2004).

Nancy Lombard is in her final year of her Ph.D looking at how 10- and 11-years old understand male violence against women and locating this within their everyday constructions of gender. She has both practical and theoretical experience in this field having been both a volunteer and caseworker at Women’s Aid refuges in the North of England and London. She was also part of the research team commissioned by the Scottish Executive to investigate male domestic abuse in Scotland. Her research interests include male violence against women, feminist methodology, childhood and gender.

Anamika Majumdar is currently a PhD student at London South Bank University. She researches South Asian married experiences of intimacy in the United Kingdom. She is supervised by Professor Jeffrey Weeks, Dr. Paula Reavey and Dr. Shaminder Takhar. Her research interests lie in sexuality, relationships and culture. She has previously worked on research projects focussed on understandings of sexual health and service provision with the Bangladeshi community of Tower Hamlets and South Asian women’s experiences of sexual violence.

Jarmila Mildorf is a lecturer in the Department of English and American Studies at the University of Paderborn and is the author of Storying Domestic Violence: Constructions and Stereotypes of Abuse in the Discourse of General Practitioners (University of Nebraska, 2007).

Jenny O’Connor is a PhD student at University College Dublin in Ireland and a lecturer in Communications at Waterford Institute of Technology. Her research examines Deleuzian approaches to modern film as well as feminist reworkings of Deleuze’s philosophies. The three directors that her thesis focuses on are Neil Jordan, Quentin Tarantino and Pedro Almodóvar.

Juliette Pattinson is a lecturer in the Department of History at the University of Strathclyde. She is a social and cultural historian of twentieth-century Britain and Europe, with particular interests in gender, personal testimonies and war and is the author of Behind Enemy Lines: Gender, Passing and the Special Operations Executive in the Second World War (Manchester University Press, 2007). Her current research focuses upon the First Aid Nursing Yeomanry, a voluntary women's organisation which celebrated its centenary in 2007.

Paula Reavey is a senior lecturer in Psychology at London South Bank University. Her research interests are around embodiment, social remembering, visual psychology and feminist theory. Recent work includes a co-edited volume (with Sam Warner, Routledge, 2003), New Feminist Stories of Child Sexual Abuse: Sexual Scripts and Dangerous Dialogues, a forthcoming book on Mental Health and Distress (with Richard Bentall, John Cromby and Dave Harper) and a forthcoming edited book on Social Remembering (with Janice Haakien), and a number of articles on child sexual abuse, sexuality and embodiment, using discourse analysis, visual methods and memory work. She is Associate Editor of The Psychology of Women Section Review and on the editorial board of the British Journal of Social Psychology.

Alex Tate is a PhD student in the School of Modern Languages at Newcastle University. Her thesis is entitled Outing the Margin: Resisting the Limits of Spatially Determined Identity on Screen.

Karen Throsby is an associate professor in the Department of Sociology at the University of Warwick. Her research focuses on issues of gender, technology and the body, and she is the author of When IVF Fails: Feminism, Infertility and the Negotiation of Normality (Palgrave, 2004). Her current research is on people's experiences of obesity surgery.

Fiona Tolan is a lecturer in English at Liverpool John Moores University. Her research focuses on contemporary fiction, particularly British and Canadian writing. She is the author of Margaret Atwood: Feminism and Fiction (Rodopi, 2007) as well as various articles on women's writing and second wave feminism. Her current research includes work on Ian McEwan and masculinity.