Lorena Arocha is a Lecturer in Sociology at Regent’s American College, London. She received a Ph.D. in Social Sciences from the University of Surrey, Roehampton, where she completed an analysis on contemporary forms of slavery. She has worked on research projects looking at past and present forms of slavery in the Indian Ocean, human trafficking policy implementation in the UK and narratives of child soldiers. Her research interests include slavery and practices similar to slavery, especially in contemporary settings as they intersect with issues on migration, identity formation, gender, childhood, race and ethnicity.

Daria Davitti is a doctoral candidate at the University of Nottingham on investments, development and human rights in conflict settings. She has previously worked for various humanitarian NGOs, focusing on gender and human rights. From 2006 to 2008 she worked as a human rights field officer for the UN Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA). She holds a degree from the University of Bologna (Italy), a Diploma in Law from BPP Law School in London and an LLM in Human Rights Law from the University of Nottingham.

Caitlin Deighan has a Bachelor’s Degree in International Relations and French Studies from Wheaton College in Norton, MA, and an M.Phil in Peace Studies from Trinity College in Dublin. She has long been interested in issues of migration and is currently interning at the US Committee of Refugees and Immigrants.

Ina Farka graduated from American University, Washington College of Law, in Washington DC, with a Doctorate in Juridical Science (SJD) degree. She holds a Masters Degree in Public International Law from the Raoul Wallenberg Institute of Human Rights and Humanitarian Law in Lund, Sweden, and a Law Degree from the University of Tirana, in Albania. She works for the US Department of Labor, International Labor Affairs Bureau, Office of Child Labor, Forced Labor, and Human Trafficking.

Alison Jobe has recently completed doctoral research entitled ‘Accessing Services: Trafficking Victims’/Survivors’ Experiences in the UK’ at Newcastle University. For the research she analyzed trafficked women’s asylum applications, conducted interviews with trafficking survivors and a range of relevant professionals. She has also conducted research on human trafficking for the International Organization for Migration, and completed research for the NSPCC and for the Medical Foundation for Care of Victims of Torture. She currently works for the NSPCC as a research officer.

Penelope McRedmond is a solicitor and legal research and training consultant. She has many years experience in human trafficking in Ireland, as a researcher and in the development and delivery of training programs. She also sat on the steering committee of an anti-trafficking organization for several years.

Torsten Moritz is executive secretary for EU policies and projects at the Churches’ Commission for Migrants in Europe (CCME) in Brussels. He studied political science in Bonn and Berlin and holds a Ph.D. in political sciences from the FU Berlin (2000). He is currently involved in CCME’s advocacy work with the European Parliament and the European Commission and in the interregional global ecumenical network on migration of the World Council of Churches. He has contributed to the publication of a variety of manuals, guides and studies on questions related to migration and migration policies in Europe, in particular on trafficking in human beings and refugee resettlement.

Ronaldo Munck is theme leader for internationalization and social development at Dublin City University and visiting Professor of Sociology at the University of Liverpool. He has written over 20 books on development, globalization and labour issues. Professor Munck has taught in a number of universities in Europe, the Americas and Sub Saharan Africa.

Cezara Nanu is currently researching measures to prevent trafficking in human beings as part of her Ph.D. thesis at the University of the West of England. Cezara holds an M.A. in Public Administration and International Management from the Monterey Institute of International Studies in California, and a B.A. in Education from her home country, Moldova. Her main research interests are in the fields of human rights, migration, contemporary forms of slavery, global ethics and global justice.

Maria Papantoniou-Frangouli is a sociologist working in the Study and Research Department of the Integration Centre for Migrant Workers
(KSPM, Athens, Church of Greece). She has been working for a number of years with a specialization on issues of migration in Europe.

Sr Imelda Poole is a Loreto sister who has lived and worked in Albania for the last four years. She is involved in the field of trafficking both at the national and international levels, working locally with trafficked victims in a shelter in Albania, and also working at European- and global-level networking with religious orders campaigning against trafficking and exploitation.

Eilís Ward is Lecturer in International Relations and Women’s Human Rights in the School of Political Science and Sociology at NUI Galway in Ireland.

Marcin Wiśniewski worked as an assistant on projects carried out by the University of Warsaw (Institute for Crime Prevention and Rehabilitation); ‘Trafficking in Human Beings – Prevention and Prosecution’ (August 2004–August 2006) and ‘Prevention of the Cross-Border Crime connected with the Sex Industry – Poland, Czech Republic, Germany’ (August 2005–October 2006). He is a co-worker for projects carried out by the University of Warsaw (Centre of Migration Research): ‘Trafficking in Human Beings – Prevention and Prosecution’ (2007–2008).

Gillian Wylie is a lecturer in International Peace Studies at the Irish School of Ecumenics, Trinity College Dublin. She teaches in the fields of international politics and gender, war and peace, and she has researched and published on human trafficking into Ireland for the purposes of sexual and labour exploitation.
